In a recent interview, Coetzee talks about the themes in his new novel, the challenges of writing about a country in transition, and the role of fiction in our current political climate. Coetzee has said that in his new novel, The School of Jesus, he wanted to explore the relationship between religion and politics, and the ways in which religion can be used to justify political oppression. He also wanted to examine the role of the artist in a society that is in flux, and the ways in which art can be used to resist political forces.
